Evie Smith is a project manager with The Conafay Group, focusing on client servicing, marketing, and conducting research for the firm's funding team. She previously held a year-long internship position with the company, during which she participated in client meetings, attended relevant conferences in the DC area, and performed extensive research on health policy topics related to client needs.

During her undergraduate years, Ms. Smith gained experience with medical financials through a fiscally-focused internship with the City of San Antonio Metropolitan Health District, as well as international affairs through an internship with the City of San Antonio International Relations Office. She participated in the GW School of Medicine and Health Sciences' Interdisciplinary Student Community-Oriented Prevention Enhancement Service (ISCOPES), a service-learning volunteering initiative that connects GW undergraduate, MPH, and MD students with underserved communities in the D.C. area. Through this program, Ms. Smith worked with a small team to create and implement a year-long curriculum focused on adult health literacy at two local sites. She gained skills in leadership and planning as well as a better understanding of the varying degrees of health literacy. She later served as Education Chair for the GW chapter of Delta Epsilon Mu, a co-ed professional fraternity for students with interest in the pre-health field. In this role, she supported students by creating opportunities for peer-to-peer tutoring.

Ms. Smith earned a bachelor's degree in Public Health from The George Washington University's Milken Institute School of Public Health, where she graduated summa cum laude and is a member of Phi Beta Kappa. Originally born in the UK, she is fluent in both English and American.
